CONSTRUCTION DISPUTES

When the parties cannot reach a resolution themselves then expensive, time-consuming legal procedures begin, which severely affects all the participants in construction.

Without the means to address the disputes, minor issues can grow faster with crippling consequences for project participants.

It has been found that when resolution occurs sooner, rather than later, when these resolution is relatively confrontational, there is a better chance that dispute can arise.

Waiting until the end of a project to address a dispute inevitably makes it harder and more expensive to resolve.

Construction disputes take more time and efforts of project management team to resolve it.

If the solutions such as negotiation doesn't work then Alternative Dispute Resolution methods are seeking before litigation approach.

Construction projects involve many parties other than the owner are: Employer, consultants, main contractor, subcontractors and suppliers in any construction project.

Therefore, it is essential to manage all parties in the contract with proper project management solutions.
